

C'mon people, think about it here, any company who gives ratings on companies, and collects money from them at the same time? What do you whink is going to happen with the companies who are willing to do the pay off. It's just a legal form of extortion, or misrepresentation at the least on behalf of the BBB.

Shawn Henderson

Jason
Thomasville, Alabama
U.S.A.

Submitted: 2/17/2006 10:23:53 AM
Modified: 2/17/2006 10:23:53 AM

Consumer Comment

BBB.ORG is a JOKE

The BBB.ORG is a reflection of the local BBB because they do nothing for complaints, they list companies with high ratings that don't deserve them, they hide complaints, and they give consumers a false sense of security.

I had to file a report against Stamps.com, the BBB.org did nothing for the complaint, and I noted the number of complaints prior to filing my complaint, after I filed my complaint the number of complaints filed did not increase. My complaint wasn't resloved, but the number of unresolved complaints didn't rise either.

BBB.ORG you are a joke and I will never place any security in your orginiaztion, your seal means nothing to me.

I am glad there is a place to complain against the BBB.

Fed Up!
Conway, South Carolina
U.S.A.

Submitted: 3/11/2006 4:53:13 AM
Modified: 3/11/2006 4:53:13 AM

Consumer Comment

BBB IS A JOKE

BBB of Coastal Carolina is a rip-off to consumers.

I sent repeated emails to John Trudeau (President of BBB of Coastal Carolina) trying to find out why a company with a ton of complaints like Advanced Internet Technology (AIT) is allowed to be a member of their Bureau with absolutely no response from Trudeau only to find out that AIT's membership was mysteriously terminated. Alex who works for AIT was able to shed some light on the situation when he finally admitted that Trudeau attempted to undercut his Fayetteville headland and sales staff by dumping them and getting office space at a deep discount from AIT. The only