Has the BBB asked you to pay-to-play, too?

Complain Against the BBB

So what do you do when the organization you trust to protect consumers is exposed as a being more interested in collecting accreditation dues than actually doing their job and protecting consumers?

File a Complaint Against the BBB

There are not many places you can go to file a complaint against your local Better Business Bureau that will get any attention. As a matter of fact, some companies have gone years without speaking out against the BBB out of fear of reprisal. About the only two places we can see to make BBB complaints where they can make a legitimate difference is with your state's Attorney General and with your local District Attorney's Office.

We decided to make it our priority to make sure anyone who has a complaint about being treated unfairly during and after the BBB sales process has a clear path they can use to file that complaint.

Pick your state below and follow the onscreen instructions to file your complaint against the BBB today. It is a good idea to collect, scan, and have ready all your relevant documentation before beginning the complaint process.

Don't expect your state Attorney General or your local District Attorney to contact you immediately. Sometimes these things take time. We encourage you to be persistent and methodical. There will be justice in the end.
