

everyday me for the rest of my life. Dan's actions have caused severe problems for me; problems that I feel will trail me throughout my entire life.

At dinner one night he told me an in detail account of his life before he met my mother. It consisted of many illegal actions, including drug use, drug sales, breaking and entering, and the list goes on. He admitted to me that he used to be one of the largest cocaine dealers in Buckhead, he had seen one of his best friends murdered with a brick, simply because of a coke deal gone wrong. He also broke into a drugstore in an attempt to steal many prescription drugs. The police were called and when they arrived, Dan managed to roll the officer's arm up in his window and drive around the parking lot, injuring the officer.

He did, in detail, tell me that he had been using meth for quite some time. He also told me that he planned to stop and he wouldn't be able to see me for a while, while he detoxed.

In an email to his lawyer, Dan says that he was in jail with at least three people who assert to have been to my house to buy and use illegal substances. This angers me more than I can say. My house is not a drug house, it never has been. He calls it a high school party central. Well I am seventeen and well liked. I can't help that. But none of us are drug dealers, end of story. I know every person that has been to my house, and I also know who went to jail and when he or she went to jail, and not a single one was in jail while he was. He has no proof to these claims. He also states that my mother was the medium for any drugs brought into my house, which is utterly erroneous. Like I stated above, he confessed that he bought the meth into our house and smoked it there.

Dan Jape is a habitual drug user, a verbally and physically abusive father, and someone who seems to be out for blood. I'm tired of all this pain though, people get divorced all the time, all over the country, so why must we be paraded around in this never-ending fight, this ongoing episode?
